

Some Previous Articles in New Politics on Afghanistan

August 22, 2021

Who's Buried in the Graveyard of Empires?

By: Gilbert Achcar

August 22, 2021

The Afghan government's fate is but the most recent in a long list of cases of puppet entities created by a foreign occupation that collapse when that occupation ends.

RAWA Responds to the Taliban Takeover

By: Revolutionary Association of the Women of Afghanistan

August 21, 2021

Afghan Women's Mission has been in touch with RAWA to address their needs at this urgent time. In this brief Q&A, RAWA explains the unfolding situation on the ground as they see it.

Biden to Remove U.S. Troops from Afghanistan

By: Dan La Botz

April 21, 2021

The U.S.-Afghanistan War, which has lasted almost twenty years, has cost the United States 2,300 soldiers' lives and two trillion dollars, while more than 100,000 Afghans have been killed.

Logic of the Bomb

By: Chris Gardner

May 24, 2017

The GBU-43/B Massive Ordnance Air Blast (MOAB) or “Mother of All Bombs” was dropped in Afghanistan at a time of great international tension.

‘Operation Enduring America’

The U.S. in Central Asia After Afghanistan

By: Alan Ruff

December 27, 2013

“As we reassure our partners that our relationships and engagement in Afghanistan will continue after the military transition in 2014, we should underscore that we have long-term strategic interests in the broader region... As the United States enters a new phase of engagement in Afghanistan, we must lay the foundation for a long-term strategy that sustains our security gains and protects U.S. interests...” —US Senator John Kerry, Chair of Senate Foreign Relations Committee, December, 2011.

Drone Dread

By: Laurie Calhoun

New Politics, no. 55, Summer 2013

I admire Medea Benjamin, co-founder of the activist group CODE PINK, which has staged anti-war protests and promoted victims' rights all over the world. Her recently published book, Drone Warfare: Killing by Remote Control, focuses specifically on the relatively new phenomenon in military history of weaponized unmanned aerial vehicles or UAVs, the most common of which is the Predator drone. Having conducted a thorough—and dangerous—fact-finding mission to learn how U.S.

Obama's Dangerous Escalations

By: Richard Greeman

November 27, 2010

Obama's decision to radically escalate the wars he was ostensibly elected to terminate is a measure of U.S. imperialism's desperation. It's not just that our erstwhile peace candidate and future Nobel peace laureate is withdrawing exhausted U.S. troops from the frying pan of Iraq only to transfer them into the fire of Afghanistan, although that itself was an act of desperation. Many of these "volunteer" soldiers and reservists, shattered after several devastating tours of duty in Iraq, are being forced to remain in the service years beyond their contracts.

Obama's War/Obama's Atrocities

By: Stephen R. Shalom

March 27, 2010

Since George Bush launched Operation Enduring Freedom in October 2001 — the unjust, illegal, and unnecessary attack on Afghanistan — there have been constant US and NATO strikes on Afghan civilians, along with constant denials that such strikes have taken place.

We Call for the United States to End Its Wars in Afghanistan and Pakistan!

By: Campaign for Peace and Democracy

New Politics, No. 48, Winter 2010

THIS MAY BE A TURNING POINT for the expanding U.S./NATO wars in Afghanistan and Pakistan, a time when speaking out clearly and unambiguously against war can make a crucial difference. Today we see signs all too reminiscent of the step-by-step deepening of the U.S. commitment to the war in Vietnam in the 1960s. In response, we declare ourselves firmly against military escalation in the region and for the withdrawal of all U.S. and NATO forces from Afghanistan and Pakistan now. We also call for an end to drone attacks in both countries.

Obama Fudges History

By: Stephen R. Shalom

December 2, 2009

In his speech justifying his escalation of the war in Afghanistan, President Obama reminded us why the US was fighting there in the first place. After 9-11, he recalled, the United Nations Security Council “endorsed the use of all necessary steps to respond to the 9/11 attacks.” And then, “only after the Taliban refused to turn over Osama bin Laden,” did the United States send its troops into Afghanistan. This account is doubly wrong.

War in Afghanistan and Pakistan: A critical moment to voice your opposition

By: Thomas Harrison, Joanne Landy

October 9, 2009

The President and Congress are reviewing U.S. policy on the wars in Afghanistan and Pakistan. This is a critical moment. This may be a turning point for the expanding U.S. wars in Afghanistan and Pakistan, a time when speaking out clearly and unambiguously against war can make a crucial difference. We urge you to sign the Campaign for Peace and Democracy emergency statement calling for an end to military intervention in both countries. The statement declares us firmly against military escalation in the region and for the withdrawal of all U.S.

Afghan Rules of Engagement

By: Stephen R. Shalom

June 23, 2009

There’s an AP story today that the U.S. commander in Afghanistan “will soon order U.S. and NATO forces to break away from fights with militants hiding among villagers.” The order is expected to reduce “the use of air strikes, mortars and artillery in villages.” There are three points to note here: 1. The order does not prohibit U.S. troops from using massive force when civilians are nearby if the troops are in “imminent danger,” and indeed, the order allows massive force if necessary to avoid “undue danger” to the troops.

Confronting Terrorism and War

By: Stephen R. Shalom

New Politics, no. 32, Winter 2002

Only a Democratic Foreign Policy Can Combat Terrorism

By: Thomas Harrison

New Politics, no. 32, Winter 2002